

Casel.org states students need to develop authentic school-family-community relationships and practice the five SEL competencies through a rigorous and meaningful curriculum. Research has shown that the Lead4Change Lessons address these competencies empowering students to be a contributing factor to safe and healthy communities.

This chart and the descriptions below show the connections between CASEL's competencies and the L4C Lessons.

SELF-AWARENESS

Students assess their strengths and limitations by identifying and reflecting on events that have helped shape who they are. Students link feelings, values, and thoughts to develop interests and sense of purpose.

> Lifeline > 3 big questions > Self and team role reflection

SELF-MANAGEMENT

Students practice goal setting and organizational skills by developing and executing an action plan with their team that meets a school or community need. Students also manage their thoughts, emotions, and behaviors.

> Research > Establish plans > Set goals

RESPONSIBLE DECISION-MAKING

Students consider the well-being of others and how their role and actions can make an impact in the community. Students work as a team to analyze information, identify solutions to social problems, and adapt actions based on results.

> People map > Self and team reflections > Track team progress

RELATIONSHIP SKILLS

Students work within a team framework to satisfy a school or community need. Through this team, students need to communicate clearly, work collaboratively, navigate unfamiliar settings, and seek or offer help when needed.

> Elevator speech > Persuasive writing > Promote project

SOCIAL-AWARENESS

Students become socially aware and learn to empathize through research of a specific school or community need. Students recognize and appreciate the diversity of their school and local community.

> Research community need > Understanding non-profit organizations > Celebrate and recognize others

ASCA (Schoolcounselor.org) developed the mindset & behavior categories to align with varying student needs and priorities from district to district. The Lead4Change Student Leadership Program lessons address the ASCA standards outlined in the chart below. The lessons are perfect for use during advisory time, small group meetings, and inclusion.
